The Science and Practice of Leading Yourself:

2013 Geisel Leadership Course at Dartmouth

June 20-24, 2013

The Hanover Inn at Dartmouth
Hanover, New Hampshire

At Geisel School of Medicine, we believe that Leadership is a core competency for current and future physicians and the health care workforce, and that leadership begins with leading yourself. The material covered in this course is in accordance with the Geisel mission and commitment to create a community of physician and other leaders who exercise the kind of leadership required to tackle our most vexing challenges in health care. The course leader, Dr. Wiley “Chip” Souba, who serves as Dean of the Medical School and Vice-President for Health Affairs at Dartmouth, has written more than 40 peer-reviewed articles on leadership topics and has been teaching on leadership for many years.

This course was developed to provide participants with greater access to being effective as a leader whether they already hold a major leadership position or have had little or no leadership experience. The course is not about medicine per se; it is about what it is to be a leader and enact effective leadership. Thus, anyone may register.

The purpose of the course is to develop a deeper understanding of what is required to be a leader and to build a solid foundation providing you with greater access to exercising leadership effectively. Participants will begin developing mastery of a new “conversational domain” which will provide new opportunity sets for exercising more effective leadership.

Course Overview

After participating in this course, a learner will be able to:

• identify and deconstruct a personal leadership challenge, differentiating its content from its context and understanding the role of language in shaping each one;

• discover one’s limiting ways of being and acting as a leader and their impact on one’s effectiveness as a leader;

• apply the four pillars of being a leader and the structural framework for exercising effective leadership in day-to-day activities and interactions;

• articulate the interconnectivity and impact on leadership of neuroscience, philosophy and language; and,

• acquire and use the new Emerging Language of Leadership within the Leadership Language Performance Model.

Objectives

Wiley “Chip” Souba, MD, ScD, MBA, Dean of the Geisel School of Medicine, has developed this program with a team from Dartmouth who will serve as faculty facilitators during the course. The pedagogical methods are consistent with best practices. There will be both highly interactive sessions, requiring self-reflection, and small learning groups, requiring active participation. Individual, personal change must precede organizational change, so the course will be taught in a way that provides participants with actionable access to leadership as it is lived and experienced when one is being and acting as a leader.
